Gee... "I don't remember that"

I know I am a bit too young for a mental deficiency, (yeah that's me). Another type of self-inflicted mental problem, "Absence of awareness" is present in my being and is often confused with being ignored or disregarded by some.

This is another example of experience being a tough teacher; you get the lesson after the test is over, not recognizing and taking advantage of important signs like opportunities and potential within yourself or others as well as signs of possible problems brewing with your family, job or business. Did you ever say, "How did I miss that?" I have. We all might be a little guilty of not planning enough, not considering the consequences of our decisions. We would like to have firm convictions about things like love, religion, politics, business decisions and life in general but if we falter at times we tend to fudge it to avoid embarrassment. An old sales manager's saying... "if you can't impress them with the facts dazzle them with "B---S---" or is that a political oath? If you don't properly plan then your objectives are only dreams. Good intentions are great but it's your actions that matter, "the road to hell is paved with good...blah, blah, and blah."

"If you give me six hours to chop down a tree I will spend the first four hours sharpening my axe"

- Abe Lincoln
